REVISION'S SAWFLY® EYEWEAR SYSTEM PROTECTS HUNTERS

WILLISTON, VT, November 15, 2006 – Revision Eyewear designs and develops purpose-built protective eyewear for military users around the world including elite Special Operations Forces, numerous units of the U.S. Army, as well as Canadian, Belgian, Dutch and Singapore forces, amongst many others. The Revision Sawfly Eyewear System is fast becoming the latest choice for hunters and outdoorsmen because of its fit, form, function, comfort, and unparalleled level of ballistic protection.

The Revision Sawfly Eyewear System offers an unrestricted field of view, adjustable arms, head strap, maximum ventilation, and stylish good looks all combined with interchangeable lenses that provide high velocity performance 3 times more than required by the ANSI Z87.1 standard, and 30% greater than the very stringent military requirements for ballistic impact.

Over 600,000 Americans suffer from sports and recreation related eye injuries each year¹, and over 90% of those injuries are preventable. The indestructible optical grade polycarbonate lenses provide optimal, distortion-free optics while protecting eyes from ballistic impacts and providing 100% UV protection from the sun's destructive rays. The lightweight Sawfly eyewear is comfortable for all-day wear in the field or on the range and is available in two sizes for a perfect fit for everyone. Interchangeable lenses in clear, solar and high-contrast can be quickly and easily changed out for various light conditions from daybreak through dusk.
